Darin Hinman opted out of a CSU camping trip due to University restrictions on medical marijuana use. Hinman uses prescription marijuana to ease pain from an injury he sustained fighting in Iraq.

Colorado State University does not allow medical marijuana on campus or at campus-related activities.

Hinman, a senior studying journalism and technical communications at CSU, received his medical license to replace his opiate use.

"I was injured in Iraq," Hinman said. "I got some shrapnel in my back — metal from an explosion. So the VA had me on 240 (mg) tramadol and like 100 (mg) methadone a month — a lot of opiates, just for pain management. It got so bad I was having seizures and blackouts because they had me on such a high dose. My VA doc actually convinced me to get the medical marijuana card."

Hinman said he tried to work with leaders of the group on the drug policy, suggesting edible alternatives but was ultimately denied.

"Unfortunately it's CSU's policy that they don't allow medical marijuana at any of their campus activities that are CSU-related in general. Even if it's off campus, it doesn't matter," Hinman said. "So basically I can’t go on the trip then, because you know I can’t go skiing for five days without using something for pain."

Colorado law allows medical and recreational marijuana use, however under the federal Controlled Substance Act, these activities are still illegal.

Executive Director of Public Affairs and Communications Mike Hooker said that since the possession and use of marijuana is still prohibited under federal law, the University must abide by it.

"Because marijuana possession and the use of marijuana is prohibited under federal law, we are actually required to not allow it here on campus," Hooker said. "We don’t allow marijuana, whether it's for medical or recreational use, because that's federal CSU journalism student Ben Ward takes advantage of the beautiful spring weather to take some photos of the Poudre River while standing upon the tracks just north of Old Town.

Rocky Mountain Student Media gets new president

The Rocky Mountain Student Media Corporation is pleased to announce that Pete Waack, general manager of The Daily Orange in Syracuse, NY, has been selected as the new President/CEO of the RMSMC.

Waack will begin in June 2015, replacing Larry Steward, who has decided to return to the private sector.

Waack has served as the general manager of Syracuse’s independent student newspaper since 2001, having received his J.D. from the University of Colorado and a B.A. in communication from the University of Wisconsin. Waack was recognized as the Nonprofit Executive of the Year from the CNY Business Journal in 2013 and has served on a variety of community boards within the Syracuse area. Also noteworthy is that the Daily Orange placed second in the Princeton Review’s selection of the Best College Newspapers in 2014, along with being named the Best College Paper in the Country by the Society of Professional Journalists in 2011.

What’s happening

- What: Peace Corps General Information Meeting: Join CSU’s Peace Corps Representative and returned Peace Corps volunteers to learn helpful strategies for applying and hear about the realities and logistics of service.
  When: 5:00 - 7:00 p.m.
  Where: Laurel Hall

- What: Resume Rush: Put your best foot forward at the Just In Time Job & Internship Fair. Have your resume critiqued by a resume professional. This event is an excellent way for you to fine tune one of your best marketing tools - your resume. No appointment necessary, just drop-by for a quick 15 minute critique.
  When: 10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
  Where: Career Center - Lory Student Center Room 120

What's happening

- What: Peace Corps General Information Meeting: Join CSU’s Peace Corps Representative and returned Peace Corps volunteers to learn helpful strategies for applying and hear about the realities and logistics of service.
  When: 5:00 - 7:00 p.m.
  Where: Laurel Hall

- What: Resume Rush: Put your best foot forward at the Just In Time Job & Internship Fair. Have your resume critiqued by a resume professional. This event is an excellent way for you to fine tune one of your best marketing tools - your resume. No appointment necessary, just drop-by for a quick 15 minute critique.
  When: 10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
  Where: Career Center - Lory Student Center Room 120
“Campus Corps links college student volunteers with Fort Collins kids facing a troubled home life, disciplinary problems or who are struggling in the classroom.”

Campus Corps provides direction to at-risk youth

By Rachel Musselman
The Rocky Mountain Collegian

Thanks to a small group of Colorado State University students, local at-risk youth are receiving guidance through mentoring at a crucial time in their lives.

According to Program Director and CSU professor Jen Krafchick, Campus Corps links college student volunteers with Fort Collins kids facing a troubled home life, disciplinary problems or who are struggling in the classroom.

The volunteer-based club partners each kid with a college-aged mentor who provides them with a support system they might not otherwise have access to, Krafchick said.

The club meets for four hours a week for a 12-week period, during which the participants eat dinner together, work on homework and join in pro-social activities such as gardening or science experiments, Krafchick said.

“We’ve done everything from sports to poetry,” Krafchick said. “We try and bring a lot of diversity into the activities so all the participants can find something they like. We even made hovercrafts.”

Krafchick said the young participants are recommended by school systems, therapists and juvenile court systems. She said college students work well as role models for kids without strong direction in their lives.

“We’ve been shown to successfully help kids, to the point that we’re receiving national attention,” said senior Campus Corps intern Katie Harmson. “This is such a positive outlet for them.”

The club, founded in 2010, also extends to the professional world.

“We’ve helped students complete their GED and apply for jobs or college,” Krafchick said. “We want to set them up for success.”

Campus Corps techniques are based on years of mentoring research, and every session is supervised by a graduate student studying family therapy, Krafchick said.

“It gives the kids the chance to speak to a therapist in a casual, no-pressure atmosphere,” Krafchick said.

Senior Nicole Arja said the club has changed her life.

“It’s so great to know that every volunteer is there to help make a difference, and when the kids walk in, it’s like a light,” Arja said. “You just know how much they want to be here.”

Arja said one of the best aspects of the club is the variety of students participating.

“It’s not just psychology majors — we have over 85 different colleges participating,” Arja said. “It shows that this is something everybody needs.”

Campus Corps applications are due April 1, but late applications will be considered on a first-come, first-served basis.

Collegian reporter Rachel Musselman can be reached online at news@collegian.com or on Twitter @rmusselman

Comedy Central announces current ‘Daily Show’ correspondent Trevor Noah as new host

By McKenna Ferguson
The Rocky Mountain Collegian

Early Monday, Comedy Central gave fans of “The Daily Show” what they’ve been waiting for since Jon Stewart announced he was leaving the show after 16 years as its host back in February. We have a successor, and it’s a familiar face.

Current senior international correspondent Trevor Noah will be sitting at the desk after Stewart’s departure.

Noah made a name for himself on the late night program when he joined the team in December, with some of his most notable segments being “Spot the Africa,” in which he displayed photos of locations in both Africa and the U.S. and asked Stewart to guess which was which, and “Boko Haram in Nigeria,” where he discussed the hypocrisy in the lack of coverage of the terrorist group’s atrocities.

Many are already suggesting that, as a South African who grew up during apartheid, Noah’s perspectives on race and intersectionality will bring a fresh take to the show.

Entertainment Weekly proceeded to gather up supportive celebrity tweets about the replacement, arguably the best and most direct being Chris Rock’s that simply read: “Thank you, President Obama.”

In a statement, Stewart expressed excitement for the change saying, “I’m thrilled for the show and for Trevor. He’s a tremendous comic and talent that we’ve loved working with.”

Noah himself took to Twitter shortly after the announcement tweeting, “No one can replace Jon Stewart. But together with the amazing team at ‘The Daily Show,’ we will continue to make this the best damn news show!”
Fraternity and Sorority Life is extremely diverse, so it’s unfair to dismiss all of it as something disastrous based off a couple misguided organizations. Greek organizations range from those that focus on social growth, to others that focus on a particular area of study or service.

Social fraternities and sororities are usually the ones behind the scandals that pop up, but within Greek organizations, no two groups are the same. For example, the Sigma Alpha Epsilon chapter at Colorado State University is much different from the chapter that just got banned at University of Oklahoma. Even the members within the same fraternity or sorority are extremely different from one another.

I myself am in a fraternity, and have seen just how positive of an experience it can be. The common stereotype is that fraternities are crazy, disrespectful, misogynistic and an assortment of other negative traits. That is not a completely unfounded stereotype, but for many fraternities it is completely undeserved. For the one I joined, and many others, it is not a fair depiction of fraternities.

Fraternity and Sorority Life here at CSU is not perfect. There has been a fair share of negative incidents in the past, but the intentions are positive. A huge part of my experience, and what is at the core of the fraternity I joined (and no doubt many other fraternities and sororities), is the goals of trying to improve as a person and making a positive impact in the world. Greek organizations here at CSU, and many of those at other institutions, are committed to both helping members become better people and serving the community. The intentions of improving as a person and helping the community Greek culture have real potential to lead to amazing things, but too often these values fall to the wayside and poor decisions start being made.

No doubt fraternities can get out of hand. When a bunch of college men get together, sometimes bad things can come from that, but fraternities are not the problem. The problem is deeper than the fraternity itself. Behind fraternities that turn to hazing or collective racism, there is a community that fosters those types of individuals — the ones who allow rotten activities and values to be realized. Greek organizations with the right values, right intentions and members can be used to curb activities like sexual harassment, hazing or excessive drinking too.

An important fact to realize is that membership in a Greek organization alone doesn’t actually alter a group of people. For various reasons, the idea of a fraternity as a crazy and wild entity has been implanted in society, but in reality a Greek organization is just a group of people working together towards a common goal. There’s nothing inherently bad about that, but sometimes, like any organization, it can turn into something negative.

Though it is not perfect, CSU’s Greek culture is more often than not a positive experience that focuses on community and charity. It is both the responsibility of Fraternity and Sorority Life members and the community to keep Greek culture positive and make sure it remains a pathway to improve the community and those who choose to join.

Collegian Columnist Troy Wilkinson is searching far and wide for a date to his fraternity’s formal and can be reached at letters@collegian.com or on Twitter @blumitts.
It's time to get informed this spring. With student election season in full swing, we have an unparalleled opportunity to stand in solidarity as a campus community and assert our needs to University administration. It is time for everyone to decide what ASCSU's role is in holding CSU leadership accountable for their actions. It is time to get informed and involved in student representation.

The reason student government is so important this season is because these elections are taking place during a critical time of transition and friction for both the University and Fort Collins. The rapid urbanization along the Front Range has caused our region to experience growing pains, evident by struggles with panhandling, conflicts over student housing and transportation concerns. As the CSU administration and city council begin to have these conversations on issues like the U+2 law and public parking, it is essential that we have strong student representation to defend our interests and voice our concerns as one of the fastest-growing populations in the city. Campus government is the place to start.

ASCSU provides an excellent platform for students to voice their concerns, but it has been sorely underutilized by our campus community. The organization is not very visible on campus and can appear to some as a homogeneous group of overachieving students and Type-A personalities because it is dominated by a very small segment of the CSU community. In reality, ASCSU struggles to attract students and sees a high turnover rate in its representatives because many across campus are unaware of how it works or what it does. The strength of our student government is only as strong as the community it represents. In other words, our platform for the student voice is only as loud as we are willing to make it. We are foolish to not utilize the opportunity.

ASCSU serves two primary functions that will be critical to students' influence moving forward. First, they have control over allocation of millions of dollars in student funds, including indirect control over the budget of the Collegian. This can have a large impact on student-run organizations and involvement opportunities on campus. More importantly, the vice president of ASCSU (either Clayton King, Taylor Albaugh or Filipp Dedogryuk after this election) sits on the Student Fee Review Board, which provides a direct outlet to University administration to voice students' budgetary concerns. As CSU's largest source of income, we deserve transparency and addressing of our concerns, and this function is essential to getting that respect and legitimate attention from University leadership moving forward. This starts by students getting involved to legitimize our campus representation.

As a student body, we cannot afford to continue as we have and leave ASCSU under-utilized by students and under-respected by administration. Too often with recent student concerns like parking and the on-campus stadium, we have seen Tony Frank and other University administrators turn their noses up at public opinion. While CSU has every right as a business to use its land and resources as it sees fit, we cannot let administration forget that we the students are their primary customers and deserve to be treated as such. Whether you plan to vote for Yearby, Sydoriak or Wester this election season, it's time to get behind our student representation and demand the accountability and transparency as that we deserve as paying customers.

Collegian Senior Columnist Sean Kennedy can be reached at letters@collegian.com or on Twitter @seanskenn.
CSU Equestrian Polo strives for first national title since 1999

By Haleigh Hamblin
The Rocky Mountain Collegian

For the second time in three seasons, almost two years to the exact date, CSU has advanced to compete at Nationals. With 2013 ending in a loss in the finals by one goal and 2014 concluding at regionals, this season has the highest potential in 15 years.

“This really means a lot to us because a lot of people were doubting us, but we haven’t lost since the beginning of the season and have been beating all these tough teams,” transfer student Alex Kokesh said. “Now that we have the regional title, they are a little nervous.”

The team will leave Easter Sunday for Philadelphia, destined for Storrs, Connecticut. With a bye in the first round of the tournament and a No. 1 seed locked in, the team is excited to make history with four other teams standing in the way.

A win would be the first national title for the school since 1999.

“I would say it is a big difference compared to last season,” captain and coach Kareem Rosser said. “This season we have a lot more chemistry. Over the three years that I have been here, I would say this is the closest our team has been.”

With two returning starters, one of which being the captain and coach alongside midfielder Jarod Berg, the team feels this season has clicked unlike any before.

Rosser has been the captain of the team for the last two seasons and has been the elected coach by the team. Without a coach look-ing in on the team’s every move, Rosser and the team are able to make decisions that work best for the team and are often taken to a vote. Rosser was described by his teammates as a humble player who looks to make the team the best it can be.

“Jarod Berg has improved a lot this season. And Kokesh brings a different style of play to the team that we didn’t have last season and is much needed,” Rosser said. “Myself personally, I have matured as a player and I

This really means a lot to us because a lot of people were doubting us, but we haven’t lost since the beginning of the season and have been beating all these tough teams.”

Alex Kokesh
Transfer student

“I try my best to complement his style, and that really has worked well with us this season winning games.”

Kokesh described it like indoor soccer — a fast-paced game that lets players use the walls when driving down the field, with each position rotating as each player moves up and down the field. He believes their style and strategies rely on its fluidity.

“It’s really cool because Kareem (Rosser) is a lot like the people I played with overseas. He is an animal out there,” Kokesh said. “I try my best to complement his style, and that really has worked well with us this season winning games.”

Kokesh mentioned that one of the team’s strengths, competing against some of the other schools on the national level, is the fact that they spread out around the arena and do not line up along the boards like some of the Ivy League schools.

“Now we are getting toward the end of the season, I think we are going to continue to focus on what we have done all season long, seeing that it has kept us winning,” Rosser said. “I think that these next couple days and weeks are going to be intense. Getting as much time on the horses as we can and keeping ourselves healthy is what is important right now.”

“We can’t play down to the other teams’ level. We are a well-balanced team with a strong bench,” Kokesh added. “We are the team to beat right now.”

Collegian Sports Reporter Haleigh Hamblin can be reached at sports@collegian.com and on Twitter @haleighhamblin.
TUESDAYS | $5 YETI MUG MIXES

32 oz MUGS
MIXED DRINK

DRINK LIKE A YETI

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK
MONDAY: 6PM-2AM | TUESDAY - SUNDAY: 11AM-2AM
Suite #101, 23 Old Town Square, Fort Collins, Colorado 80524
For More Information Call | (970) 482-YETI (9384)
Softball

Pitcher Holly Reinke set to knuckle her way through the Mountain West

By Sam Lounsberry
The Rocky Mountain Collegian

Every softball club needs an ace pitcher, so when Colorado State's softball team needed one, that ace is Holly Reinke.

Reinke established herself as CSU's No. 1 and went on to hold opponents to a .256 batting average for a rank of fifth in the MW while also notching a 2.56 earned run average, which was third-best in the conference. CSU rolled to a 32-17 record last season, making Reinke the pitcher of record for over 62 percent of the Rams' wins.

So there was no doubt in CSU head coach Jen Fisher's mind that Reinke would be her ace when she returned for this season as a junior.

"When you have someone like Holly, you're going to throw them," Fisher said.

But to start this season, Reinke stumbled out of the gate, losing in her first three starts and six of her first seven.

"It was definitely frustrating. I think I came off of a real high from last year," Reinke said. "I felt expectations that I was supposed to come out and do the exact same thing (this year), which was fair. I mean I wanted it, too. It wasn't like pressure from everybody else. It was pressure on myself to want to do just as well."

Part of why Reinke saw what seemed to be diminishing success is due to the increased level of competition on CSU's schedule this year compared to last. The Rams have played six games against teams either ranked in the top 25 or receiving votes in the top 25, and Reinke pitched in five of them, enduring losses to No. 18 Nebraska, No. 19 Arizona State, No. 15 Minnesota and Texas, which received votes.

But Feb. 28, everything turned around. Reinke picked up a win against Bryant in which she gave up only one run, and it must have sparked the Rams. CSU won its first 11 games in March for a total of 12 in a row, six of which came courtesy of Reinke who brought her record back to .500 at 8-8 on the season and got one hit, but this year already Reinke has eight hits — including one home run — on 29 at-bats for an average of .276.

"I couldn't even tell she lost those first games. She does a really good job of keeping her composure," sophomore infielder Haley Hutton said.

Reinke said she took a helpful step back after her early-season struggles to refocus and return to the winning habit she developed last year and during her illustrious high school career at D'Evelyn in Littleton, where she threw 18 career no-hitters and was elected first-team all-state in each of her four years.

"Honestly, I think I went through a big mental change," Reinke said of the shift to success this year. "I went through a lot of self-focus, trying to reconnect with who I was last year, and trusting in my abilities, and a lot of trust in God with that, he provided me with a lot of that strength."

Part of what Reinke stopped doing was trying to emulate last season.

"I just switched, I didn't expect myself to do like last year. I just wanted to be me again and play the game," she explained.

Statistically, the junior is back among the top pitchers in the Mountain West. Though her ERA and opponent batting average are up somewhat significantly from last year's solid marks to 4.51 and .327, respectively, Reinke's 60 strikeouts and eight wins rank her fourth in the conference in each of those categories.

What makes Reinke such a tough pitcher is partly her ability to throw a knuckleball, a rarity in softball.

"I have big enough hands that I can throw it," she said of the knuckle. Fisher sometimes has trouble catching for her because of the high unpredictability of Reinke's knuckleball.

"I've never had a pitcher that can throw the knuckle as well as she does," Fisher stated. "I catch her in the bullpen sometimes, and it will shock the heck out of me, moving different directions."

Reinke learned to throw the difficult pitch from Richard Shriner, who has served as Reinke's de facto pitching coach since she was nine.

"He's kind of my father figure in a way, another father figure I have," Reinke said of Shriner.

Additionally, Reinke has displayed her skill at the plate this season with more allowance from Fisher to hit. She took only four at-bats last season and got one hit, but this year already Reinke has eight hits — including one home run — on 29 at-bats for an average of .276.

"Her first role on our team is as a pitcher, so it really takes a lot of persistence to go ahead and keep hitting," Fisher said. "For two years, she really did all the same (batting) drills as all the other girls and kept showing me 'I want to hit.'"

Though the start of March treated Reinke and the Rams well, they closed out the month with four straight losses, two of which went to Reinke to put her record at 8-10 on the year, before beating Northern Colorado last week. But with conference play underway, expect to see Reinke continue to persist. Fisher said the junior will likely start this weekend when the team goes to San Jose State for a three game series.

"We expect her to get a lot of innings from here on out in all the
The Rocky Mountain Collegian   |  Tuesday, March 31, 2015

JUST IN TIME

job & internship

FAIR

APRIL 1

4:30 - 7 pm

LSC GRAND BALLROOM

Dress for Success & Bring Your Resume!

Check out the CSU Career Fairs App!

www.career.colostate.edu
ASCUS presidential campaign: Lauren Wester and Filipp Dedogryuk

By Hannah Ditzenberger
The Rocky Mountain Collegian

The myriad of personalities at Colorado State University motivates Lauren Wester to serve the student body.

"At the end of the day, our individualities make us valuable — inherently valuable," Wester said. "Who is to say that one person's ideas aren't as good as another's?"

After hearing the platforms of the other candidates, Wester and her running mate Filipp Dedogryuk announced their candidacy Thursday.

"We do think some of the ideas (of the other teams) are wonderful," Dedogryuk said. "We do, however, have some of our own ideas that we want to put out there."

While the two acknowledge the unique challenge of being write-in candidates, they are optimistic about the results. They say that interacting with students makes running for ASCSU president and vice president a rewarding process.

"Regardless (of) who wins, we're going to be helping the students," Dedogryuk said. "That's what really brings hope to me."

Calling themselves "The Open Door Campaign," their vision involves improving the transparency between ASCSU and student body. They want to encourage all branches of student government to reach out to their constituents, improve relations with student media and increase student awareness about the function of ASCSU.

By implementing a student absentee policy, expanding the space of the Resources for Disabled Students Office, encouraging the use of open source textbooks and improving collaboration between faith communities in the community, they say they want to support students emotionally, spiritually and academically.

The team also wants to address transportation and parking by looking into creating a program like MAX on the west side of campus, championing buses down Elizabeth St. to address the overflow of traffic and expanding awareness about carpooling services.

"I'm passionate about being a person who creates impact," Wester said. "I want to be a person who inspires change, who inspires growth — not only at the organizational level but also at an individual, person level."

President candidate: Lauren Wester

When Lauren Wester was 15, she bought her first horse. An untrained mustang, Wester says it taught her important skills that she uses now in her presidential campaign.

"My parents said that I had to pay for the entire thing," Wester said. "That's really how I learned my work ethic — through jobs, I had to work to pay for it."

While the junior international studies major describes herself as diligent, she says service is most important to her.

"I've been given skills, leadership abilities and a heart to serve people," Wester said. "I'm passionate about horses, but I'm more passionate about people. I'm more passionate about helping people."

Wester did not originally plan on attending college. The Monument native instead wanted to train as an equestrian. However, after working at a Russian orphanage immediately after graduating high school, she decided to pursue a career in diplomacy.

"After this trip, I realized, wow, my life needs to be orientated around impacting people, not orientated around something I want to do," Wester said.

"That's kind of how my whole life has played out."

Robert Jordan, a history professor, has taught Wester in three upper division classes.

"(She's passionate about) human stories and experiences," Jordan said. "She always tries to see how the topics we cover in the history class into the contemporary period, to see how those can be an outlet for positive change now... She is a person that you can tell cares about other people."

Wester says she loves learning about various cultures.

"Even the regional differences within the U.S. fascinate me," Wester said.

According to Bethany Hettinger, a junior international studies major, Wester overflows with ideas.

"She always is talking to me about what she wants to do — what she wants to change," Hettinger said. "She always aims to go higher than herself. She's very passionate."

Hettinger is a close friend of Wester, saying she has seen the candidate overcome many challenges since they first met their freshman year.

Wester suffered with a chronic illness for six years, which motivated the programs she sponsored during her two years at ASCSU. Her initiative, the Chronic Health Mentoring Program, connects students suffering from illnesses with upperclassman experiencing similar issues.

"I knew coming into college that (living with my illness) would be difficult," Wester said. "I have the determination and the will to fight when it's necessary."

Wester says she wants to fight for the diverse student population, especially for international students and spiritual groups. While at ASCSU, she initiated the first Faith, Belief and Spirituality Fair at CSU. She said she wants to find meaningful connections at the University and is unafraid to develop innovative ideas.

"My goal while being at ASCSU has been to take those blinders off," Wester said. "I want to dream bigger than what has been previously established through tradition or the norms we have in the organization."

Vice presidential candidate: Filipp Dedogryuk

Proudly displaying intricate woodworking, Filipp Dedogryuk explains his love for unconventional arts, including wood burning and blacksmithing.

"He gives everything. He does his all," said Rhiannin Bunney, a close friend of Dedogryuk's and a junior English major. "He's a very passionate person and will spend a long time devoted to whatever he's interested in."

Bunney said that Dedogryuk wants all students to experience the University with the same spirit he has.

"That's why he reached out to me," Bunney said. "I was just a freshman girl in the dining hall. He started talking to me because he didn't want me to be lonely. That's why we're friends."

According to junior computer science major Adam Lynch, this passion flows into every area of Dedogryuk's life. From working in the Corbett dining hall, to researching memory, the junior psychology major lives actively.

"He's one of the most interesting people that most people might never meet," Lynch said. "His life experiences have been to a point that he has a lot of unique insights that other people don't have."

Born in Russia, but raised in Colorado, Dedogryuk says that he wants his peers to have the best possible experience at CSU. As a student paying his own tuition, he says he understands the financial woes his classmates discuss.

He is very passionate about encouraging open source textbooks.

"College really should not be this expensive," Dedogryuk said. "I see students burdened by money and some of them can't afford textbooks. ... I can't tell professors what to do, but I can advocate for the students."

He emphasizes his desire to interact with students. Whether asking about the University programs they use, to making small talk in the residence halls, he said he tries to empathize with his peers.

"I try to make as many jokes as I can in a single moment with a customer (at the dining hall)," Dedogryuk said. "I've come across hard times. I've had friends pass. I have had to face that loss. I have faced the loss of being betrayed. I want to support (the students here)."

Lynch, who used to be a senator with ASCSU, said that Dedogryuk has the energy the organization needs.

"There's not a lot being done in the Senate," Lynch said. "Filipp is the perfect mix of all of these volatile qualities to put some life back into the organization. He really does care."

Further information about the Wester-Dedogryuk campaign can be found on Facebook, and voting will occur between April 6 and April 8.

Collegian Diversity Beat Reporter Hannah Ditzenberger can be reached at news@collegian.com or on Twitter at @h_ditzenberger.
Giving blood sure takes a lot out of you: blood drive held on campus

By Jessie Trudell
The Rocky Mountain Collegian

It was approximately 2:15 p.m. Thursday as my life flashed before my eyes, my vision became hazy and I dropped to the ground. Just kidding – but I sure got close.

Like many other people, I do not particularly enjoy needles. They do not especially appeal to me. However, the fact that every two seconds someone in the U.S. needs a transfusion of blood convinced me to get past my fears and donate some liquid gold.

So there it was: my opportunity to give back, only a few steps and a needle away.

“It smells so sterile in here,” I said aloud as I entered the donation-site-on-wheels: the Bonfils Blood Center bus, stationed right outside Colorado State University’s Clark A building.

The nurse filling out my information asked, “well, would you rather have it smell not sterile?”

Touché.

The nurse finished registering me as a blood donor and asked questions pertaining to a brief history of my health. I was then declared eligible to donate.

I think the nurses are trained to smell fear, because before I even sat down at the blood-giving station, they had a bottle of juice in my hand and were instructing me to breathe deeply. Once I got comfortable, they took the donation. The only pain I felt was a slight sting in my arm when they inserted and removed the needle. However, I think a minor irritation such as the needle can be easily conquered when lives of others depend on it. Following my donation, I was free to go after a brief recovery period.

“I walked out of that bus feeling like a better person, especially because I learned that one whole blood donation can help improve and save the lives of up to three patients. Bonfils Blood Center serves as the necessary middleman between donors and the people that need the donations the most.

“The most rewarding part for me is the fact that giving blood saves lives every day,” said Jeff Dillavou, CDR for Bonfils Blood Center.

Bonfils Blood Center has been accommodating the blood needs of the Rocky Mountains since early 1943. Given that blood cannot be synthetically made, Bonfils Blood Center relies solely on the donations of healthy and willing volunteers. These donations are then used to save the lives of people that experience significant blood loss through trauma or other circumstances.

Collegian Reporter Jessie Trudell can be reached at news@collegian.com or on Twitter @JessieTrudell.

Jay Kailey, a second year nursing student, and Nick Millisor, a third year business and finance major, donate blood at the Bonfils Blood Center bus just outside the Warner College building.

Although I still do not particularly enjoy needles, I will do my best to overcome my fear for the greater good.

Jeff Dillavou
CDR for Bonfils Blood Center
Traylor said there was a location in Laurel Village may be cramped and out of the way for many students, but it’s fitting with the theme of the building.

“The whole purpose of this building (the Pavilion in Laurel Village) was to promote renewable resources, to be eco-friendly,” Traylor said. “It goes along with the whole idea of being renewable.”

Alves said that because of the location, The Spoke ends up serving mostly students in the resident halls, and if they moved closer to campus, they would be able to serve more of the general student population.

Traylor said it would help to have more space and that it may or may not be beneficial to move the shop closer to central campus.

“Right now, we are still in an experimental phase,” Traylor said. “We’re just seeing if it’s going to work. So far I think it does work pretty well. We’ll see where they decide to take it.”

Traylor said he saw a bike shop like this coming to CSU.

“I feel like CSU needed to have its own bike shop for a long time,” Traylor said. “It just goes hand-in-hand with being a renewable school.”

Casebier said that he plans to continue coming back to The Spoke when he needs help with his bike.

“I would rather learn than pay,” Casebier said. “The learning is a lot more valuable than just getting the bike fixed.”

Collegian City Beat Reporter Sady Swanson can be reached at news@collegian.com or on Twitter @sady_sw.
Last minute to-do list for CSU seniors before graduation

By Caitlyn Berman
The Rocky Mountain Collegian

Graduation looms just around the corner, and for Colorado State University seniors who feel overwhelmed, this list of last-minute graduation tips can serve as a helpful survival guide.

1. Order your cap and gown. If you haven’t done this already, now is the time. The CSU Alumni Association offers various grad packs ranging in price and perks. For a Bachelor’s degree, prices range from $39 to $750. The deadline to order is April 8. If these grad packs seem a bit too pricey, you can order the cap and gown without a grad pack at the Herff Jones website where prices start at around $30. The deadline to order from this site is April 9.

2. Know the date, time and place of your graduation. This seems simple enough, but it’s important to let your friends and family know exactly where to go. Some venues have larger seating possibilities than others, so double-check where you need to be and how many people you can bring on the commencement website.

3. Research the rules of the ceremony. There are steps, requirements and expectations at graduation ceremonies, including what to wear and how to wear it.

4. Book hotels. For those of you with out-of-state parents, family and friends coming to stay for graduation, find them a place to stay. Hotels are booking up fast, so if you don’t have enough room in your current home, you’ll need to act quickly. If you can’t find a hotel in Fort Collins, alternative options include couch surfing or hotels in nearby towns.

5. Order your class ring. If you want to order a ring to remember your time spent at CSU, Balfour has a wide selection of special rings for graduation. The site offers rings for men and women in a variety of prices, stones and settings.

6. Utilize the Career Center. CSU’s Career Center is a helpful resource for those looking to start their careers. If you’re not sure what you want to do with your degree, the center has assessments to specify what you’re good at and where you’d fit best. To take one of these assessments, schedule a meeting with a career counselor. Another helpful tool CSU offers is CareerRAM, a search engine that connects students and alumni with employers.

7. Attend a career fair. Career fairs at CSU bring together dozens of employers, companies and students, offering them a chance to mingle and pursue potential career paths. The next job and internship fair will take place April 1, from 4:30-7 p.m. in the Lory Student Center Grand Ballroom. Graduation can be a scary time, but this list will make it easier to remember what to do and will help the time around graduation run a little bit smoother.”

“Graduation can be a scary time, but this list will make it easier to remember what to do and will help the time around graduation run a little bit smoother.”

“Graduation can be a scary time, but this list will make it easier to remember what to do and will help the time around graduation run a little bit smoother.”

Sports Reporter Sam Lounsberry can be reached at sports@collegian.com and on Twitter @samlounz.
Daily Horoscope

Nancy Black

TODAY’S BIRTHDAY (03/31/15). Fortune favors doing what you love this year. Springtime planning sets the stage for summer action. Dreams can come true ... make bold declarations. Increase your level of fun and play. Confirm reservations for an exciting trip or educational project after June.

To get the advantage, check the day’s rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — 9 — Get into your work today and tomorrow. You’re exceptionally clever with words over the next few weeks, with Mercury in Aries. Review what worked and didn’t, and update plans.

TAUROS (April 20-May 20) — 7 — Today and tomorrow could get creatively fun. For the next three weeks, with Mercury in Aries, finish up old business. Review the budget to fit future plans over the next six weeks.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — 8 — Partnership flowers over the next six weeks, with Mars in Taurus. Work together for a shared vision. Organize your work for greater efficiency.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — 9 — Work faster and make more money over the next six weeks, with Mars in Taurus. Romantic communication flowers over the next three weeks, with Mercury in Aries. Express your deepest feelings. Put your love into words.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — 8 — Your actions speak louder than words over the next six weeks. Romance and passion take new focus. Practice what you love.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — 9 — Pay bills today and tomorrow. Learn voraciously over the next three weeks. You’re especially creative and words flow with ease. Write, record and report.

PILES (Feb. 19-March 20) — 9 — For nearly three weeks, with Mercury in Aries, develop new sources of income. Make profitable connections. Get the word out. A partner helps.
Dear children, if you don’t want to take your nap please give it to us, sincerely every college student.

Date someone who gets as excited when you get home as your dog does.

Wishing I could get a tan from the light on my laptop.

What do you call the security guards outside of the Samsung store? The guardians of the galaxy!

Submit RamTalk entries to ramtalk@collegian.com. Libelous or obscene submissions will not be printed. While your comment will be published anonymously, you must leave your name and phone number for verification.

Text your rants to 970-430-5547.

Submit RamTalk entries to ramtalk@collegian.com. Libelous or obscene submissions will not be printed. While your comment will be published anonymously, you must leave your name and phone number for verification.

Text your rants to 970-430-5547.
Elevated College Living

STOP BY ROAD 34 BAR & GRILL TOMORROW BETWEEN 4:00 & 5:30PM TO LEARN MORE ABOUT LOKAL AND HAVE FOOD AND BEER ON US!

MODEL TOURS WEEK OF APRIL 6TH
GET READY TO LIVE LOKAL!

WE LOVE DOGS AND MUSIC...SERIOUSLY...BRING YOUR DOG!
WE LOVE PETS!

1201 W. PLUM • FORT COLLINS, CO • 970-407-RAMS INFO@LOKALCSU.COM

Amenities

• FREE NFL SUNDAY TICKET IN ALL UNITS
• PREMIUM DIRECTV HD DVR’S IN EVERY BEDROOM AND LIVING ROOM
• BRAND NEW CONSTRUCTION- 1, 2, AND 3 BEDROOM UNITS
• GIGABIT ETHERNET IN EVERY BEDROOM AND LIVING ROOM
• KILLER LOCATION 250 YARDS FROM CAMPUS
• 55” HDTV FLATSSCREEN TV IN YOUR UNIT!
• THE ONLY 4TH STORY ENTERTAINMENT DECK IN TOWN
• HUGE WALK IN CLOSETS
• HIGHLY SECURE AND SAFE